Beyond the bounds of hell his tricksily protean self-presentation becomes a visual metaphor too; he is a shape-shifter, sometimes cherub, sometimes toad, sometimes serpent. Only recently, the public fortunes of rationalist-foundationalist thought have taken a favorable turn with die publication of books like Alan Bloom's The Closing of the American Mind and E.

As rhetorical man manipulates reality, establishing through his words the Deconstruction and the Language of Satan in Paradise Lost. The shape of that world--of the scientist's professional activities--is determined by the shapes of fact and structure already existing in the larger world of nature, shapes that constrain and guide the scientist's work. It would most likely, then, exhibit techniques that were still fresh in his mind.
