These single-celled organisms—which remain suspended in water—are so tiny, they pass through even the finest filter. The guy in the local shop is trying to sell me a pond ioniser or more chemicals but I know nothing about ionisers. I had a combination of things happening at the same time. You can certainly try green clean-its probably my most popular product BUT be sure to extract the dead stuff as much as you can or else the dead stuff will essentially provide the nutrients for the next round of algae. My UV lamp went off. Next thing that comes to mind is Accu-clear but its also a flocculant like you. a long-term solution look at balancing the nutrient level in the pond with correct planting filtration and stocking of fish.
