There's a nice amount of dialogue, occasionally delightfully described: Goes on a little too long, in my opinion, but I liked it. Matthew Swift, London sorcerer, died two years ago. There is in London much more than life – there is power. Griffin, I feel, knows this – has lived it herself, most likely. Except Matthew Swift has been murdered two years ago. I see this is part of a series! Jeremy the Troll; the Fairy Godmother. Lots of lovely twists on o "We be light, we be life, we be fire!
